

“Legal” Cannabis, Hemp or Marijuana Can Show Up on a Drug TEST!! Use at YOUR Own Risk!! Report forwarded by Robert A

A very recent report in NEWSBREAK, titled “How does legal hemp impact drug testing in North Carolina? Here’s what to know” has some very important information that should be interesting to all y’all folks that want to rush out and buy some of David Deer’s so-called “legal weed.” According to this article, this “legal” weed may show up on drug tests and YOU could be fired from your job.

But folks, don’t believe Robert A. The link to the Report is provided below. Read it for yourselves and make your own decisions. The job you save, may be your very own. As for you folks that truly need this stuff for medicinal purposes, it appears to be readily available.

Some excerpts from the report are:

Yes, legal hemp products can result in a positive drug test since they can contain THC. THC can stay in the system from three days to over a month, depending on usage.

Legal hemp products might exceed the 0.3% THC limit, increasing the chance of detection Dr. Kelly Johnson-Arbor, a triple-board certified medical toxicologist and co-medical director of National Capital Poison Center in Washington, D.C., told Forbes Health.

North Carolina is an at-will employment state, meaning you can be fired for any reason unless it’s illegal, like discrimination. If a drug test detects THC, you might be terminated.

Read the FULL Report here.